HISTREL 889/REL 889 - Religion, Restrictions, Violence - An examination of the historical roots and current manifestations of religiously-justified violence and disenfranchisement, with a focus on the Abrahamic traditions (Judaism, Christianity and Islam). The violence treated will include the expressly physical as well as the more insidiously existential, including political and cultural marginalization. Major loci of exploration will include gender and sexuality, Israel-Palestine, and the intersection of contemporary identities. Topics include a nature of extremisms within each tradition, the challenges of assimilation and "modernity," and the role nature of citizenship and territory.

XTIANTHE 890.03 Incomprehensible Certanty - Our seminar will explore the concept of the image as developed in pre-modern Christianity, supplemented by forays into modern phenomenology and theological aesthetics. Our guiding hypothesis will be that the power and efficacy of images cannot be assimilated to propositional, mimetic, or referential models of cognition. Whereas modern epistemology and philosophical aesthetics of the 18th century and beyond have tended to construe the image as a subset of “representation” (Vorstellung), Platonic, Patristic, and Byzantine thought approach the eikon quite differently, namely, by attending to the phenomenology of its experience. That is, they position the image as the visible mediation of the invisible logos, rather than as some kind of (aesthetic) “object.” Ensuring the icon’s unique efficacy are several factors: 1) a formal element, such as the return of “inverse [or “reverse”] perspective” in early-20th century Eastern Orthodox icon theory, yet also realized in post-impressionist (Western) modernist art; 2) the situational dynamic of the image, such as its embedding in, or alluding to, ambient liturgical frameworks and purposes; and 3) the image’s materiality, such as the modernist image’s reaffirmation of color as a principal means for unveiling (and entangling the beholder in) perceptible qualities that not only fall outside the scope of propositional knowledge but, in their incontrovertible reality and presence, exhort us to recover an ontology anterior to modern procedural reason.

Our readings will commence with an examination of Plato’s ambivalent critique of images in the Sophist and in Book VII of the Republic. We will then trace the ways in which his account of the image came to be inflected and repurposed in neo-Platonist writing, both pagan and Christian, ranging from Plotinus and Proclus to Origen, Eusebius, Gregory of Nyssa, pseudo-Dionysius, St. Bonaventure and Nicholas of Cusa. Within this pre-modern genealogy, we will give particular attention to the beginnings of image theory developed by the Byzantine defenders of images: John Damascene, Theodore the Studite, and Photius. We will pair their accounts with shorter selections from twentieth-century and contemporary icon theory (P. Florensky, V. Lossky, L. Ouspensky, Fr. Maximus Constas, C. Antonova and A. C. Tsakiridou) as well as selections from 20th century phenomenology – arguably the one tradition within modern philosophy that has proven genuinely receptive to the metaphysical dimensions of the image (Husserl, Heidegger, Gadamer, Merleau-Ponty, Marion, and Chretien).

Requirements: One in-class presentation of a secondary text (15 mins.; with formal handout) and one research paper (~ 7,000 words) due at the end of the term.
